A new report produced by the German branch of UNICEF criticizes the government for providing insufficient quality housing and schooling for the record-breaking number of minors it has accepted since 2015.
lot in hosting the refugees in the last two years," Sebastian Sedlmayr, head of children’s rights and education at UNICEF Germany, told Deutsche Welle. "But it’s important to flag that there are still some shortcomings."

Out of over 1 million migrants who arrived in Germany since the outbreak of the refugee crisis two years ago, about 350,000 stated that they were under 18 at the time of their arrival, mostly from Syria, Afghanistan, Africa and Eastern Europe. The authors of the 68-page German-language study, titled “Childhood Postponed,” interviewed 447 staff and 18 migrant families at the refugee shelters hosting them last year.

UNICEF says that while much media attention has been on unaccompanied minors traveling thousands of miles to Europe, they are taken in by the state, and receive round-the-clock priority care, while those with families are left to the adults to care for them.

"Children who have come with their families are explicitly excluded from that system and legislation. They have to rely on the capacity of their parents, and of course the capacity of their parents in a situation like that – not
Most of these children are taken into so-called first reception centers, where, according to the authors, they live 10-12 to a room.

"Non-cash benefits, lack of private space, non-lockable sanitation facilities and the experience of violence and conflicts lead to dangerous moments and a hindrance of the development of refugee children and young people," said Adam Naber, from the Federal Association for Unaccompanied Minor Refugees (BumF), during a public presentation of the report in Berlin.

As a result, only about one-third of such children regularly attend school, and most are not receiving medical attention to their physical and psychological state comparable with that available to already-settled minors.

By law, initially families in Germany were supposed to spend no more than three months in the initial accommodation centers, but that period was extended to six months in October 2015, and according to the UNICEF survey as many as one-fifth of the families said that they had spent up to a year waiting for a more permanent home.

"The children should stay for as little time as possible in asylum shelters and get as quickly as possible into kindergartens, schools and job training... so they don’t lose more precious time of their childhood," said Chirstian Schneider, head of UNICEF Germany.

With Germany accepting more migrants than any other country in Europe over the past three years, Sedlmayr believes that the neglect is a result of being overwhelmed, and can be corrected through setting new priorities.

"I wouldn’t say it was a question of money, it’s much more the attention," he said. "We need more attention on the children, and especially the children that are accompanied."

With sentiment towards all migrants cooling in Germany, and frequent media stories questioning the veracity of the underage claims of many newcomers, the

But Schneider urged that politics be left out of a humanitarian crisis.

"Children who have lost their homeland and experienced horrible things have to quickly find their way back to normality. First and foremost, kids are not asylum seekers, migrants or refugees, but simply kids," said the UNICEF official.

Germany has brought its own people to their knees hosting the globalist agenda to take over Europe and make a depressed mud people equal under the elite who fly private and will live behind secure walls. There is no justification for the UN to criticize Germany.

For chancellor Merkel the Germans are no Germans no more... just people, which live longer in this country then others ... And all migrants and refugees are just people, which moved here later. Sadly she likes the newcomers most... and supports them most, too.

At least half of these 350,000 children would prove to be adults, if properly checked by doctors.

Red Air Balloon ➔ Hermine0815
If properly checked by border guards even. Some of the women even had balls and a rod

Hermine0815 ★ Leader ➔ Red Air Balloon
You're right with the last :-) But the border guards were ordered from Berlin, to let anyone in (even without regular papers) who as much as mumbles "Asylum". The ones which have been checked instead were a.e. Austrians.

The other problem we have with child refugees is not just their age, of being of military age and looking like they are even over 30, but the problem is they are almost entirely MALE. Turkey is too friendly with the Muslim Brotherhood, MB, who are too friendly with the Israeli Talmudians.

Germany has taken on more than it can chew. Most of those so-called children are actually young men over 18 coming from safe countries. They should be sent back to start with. And the UNICEF has a lot of guts. It should start at looking at the situation in the camps in Turkey and Greece.

First of all, each country should first provide a great help to its citizens (poor people, homeless), veterans etc. Secondly, if we care more or only about "refugees", we will leave our citizens in the abyss. As one said here:"Send them to rich countries like Saudi Arabia". That's it.
